Vanguard Medical Group sees future in telemedicine

Doctor visits without the visits? That is the wave of the future in medicine, according to Vanguard Medical Group (VMG), one of the state’s largest, private primary care providers. VMG has become the first primary medical care group in the state to offer telemedicine to all of its long-time patients through a new service, Vanguard eCare.

While some individual systems, such as RWJ University Hospital and Raritan-based Athene TeleHealth, provide telemedicine to elderly patients, Vanguard is the first primary care group to give all its registered patients the option to contact its physicians for treatment via technology. Telemedicine allows patients to consult with a doctor and get treatment through their computer, smart phone or tablet. Vanguard’s offering comes two months after Gov. Chris Christie signed a law, S291, validating telemedicine as a legitimate form of medical treatment that can be covered by health insurers.

Vanguard said its process is simple: patients can log onto Vanguard’s eCare service.
